AN ANGLING ANGEL

BY RON HARRIS

The legacy left by a legendary Upper Clyde angler born in 1927 has continued to grow on for decades in the mists of the River Clyde he loved so much.

It is also very much a legacy, in terms of both the fish he took time and the name he gave to those who, like George ‘Geordie’ Clark, angling was a way of life more than just a sport.

When Geordie died far too young, in December 2009 at the age of 82, the story and life of the man was eventually told. Geordie was best friend to all and knew the love and passion for fish that was in the angling community.

The story of the man who lost his chance to live to the old age of the 80s and beyond, had them all — his family, his friends and fellow anglers.

He was a regular at the various angling tournaments and was a passionate angler through his angling years.

When Geordie died far too young, in December 2009 at the age of 82, the story and life of the man was eventually told. Geordie was best friend to all and knew the love and passion for fish that was in the angling community.

The story of the man who lost his chance to live to the old age of the 80s and beyond, had them all — his family, his friends and fellow anglers.

He was a regular at the various angling tournaments and was a passionate angler through his angling years.

When Geordie died far too young, in December 2009 at the age of 82, the story and life of the man was eventually told. Geordie was best friend to all and knew the love and passion for fish that was in the angling community.

The story of the man who lost his chance to live to the old age of the 80s and beyond, had them all — his family, his friends and fellow anglers.

He was a regular at the various angling tournaments and was a passionate angler through his angling years.

When Geordie died far too young, in December 2009 at the age of 82, the story and life of the man was eventually told. Geordie was best friend to all and knew the love and passion for fish that was in the angling community.

The story of the man who lost his chance to live to the old age of the 80s and beyond, had them all — his family, his friends and fellow anglers.

He was a regular at the various angling tournaments and was a passionate angler through his angling years.

When Geordie died far too young, in December 2009 at the age of 82, the story and life of the man was eventually told. Geordie was best friend to all and knew the love and passion for fish that was in the angling community.

The story of the man who lost his chance to live to the old age of the 80s and beyond, had them all — his family, his friends and fellow anglers.

He was a regular at the various angling tournaments and was a passionate angler through his angling years.

When Geordie died far too young, in December 2009 at the age of 82, the story and life of the man was eventually told. Geordie was best friend to all and knew the love and passion for fish that was in the angling community.

The story of the man who lost his chance to live to the old age of the 80s and beyond, had them all — his family, his friends and fellow anglers.

He was a regular at the various angling tournaments and was a passionate angler through his angling years.